SYNOPSIS

If the missiles are launched, no one will survive. They must be stopped... at any cost.

Southeast Asia has become a staging ground for a major powerplay between the Superpowers. When the Soviets decide to establish a secret missile base, the Americans counter with a clandestine operation to stop them. There is only one man for the job: Brian O'Riley, who like his partner, White Tiger, is a member of the elite "American Force", a small group of highly skilled freelance commandos who stand ready to use their specialized talents in the cause of freedom wherever and whenever they are needed by their country.

Their mission ; to liquidate the Soviet espionage team headed by General Karpov, and give assistance and advice to the "Untouchables", the local civilian counter-insurgency group led by ex-cop Domingo. As civilians, the Untouchables must unfortunately operate outside the law. They are feared by the communist rebels due to their effective hit-and-run strikes, and hunted by the military that they elude. Their skill in fighting and hiding has inspired their name, the Untouchables.

Domingo and his group fight battle after valiant battle for their cause until the army corners them in a furious firefight in which the Untouchables are finally vanquished. O'Riley and Tiger, meanwhile, fight on land and sea against the best of the KGB's commando and agents. Tiger gives his life in a final battle, while O'Riley manages to bring down Karpov and the last of his men.
