SYNOPSIS

After the fall of the Ming Dynasty, China was thrown into turmoil. Many loyalists sought the return of the Ming, and the new government was equally determined to stay in power.

Conflicts arose frequently between the two factions.

Kang was one loyalist who planned the return of the Ming along with a group of other patriots. However, their secret became known to a power hungry government official named Hwang Back.

Arriving from the North, Hwang finds Kang and his daughter, Chung Chung, deep in conspiracy. At around about the same time, Chung Chung's fiancée, Chunryong, arrives to meet his new bride. The young man is a handsome suitor, but doesn't seem to be at all interested in his country, or the Ming patriots.

The Dynasty's Prince Sejong also arrives in the town to consort with Kang about the progress of his plans for restoration.

Hwang Back frantically tries to arrest the Prince and Kang, but a mysterious kung fu master with superb Shaolin techniques helps the patriots, preventing them from falling into Hwang's hands. This master uses a lotus blossom as his symbol, but the situation is complicated when another mysterious kung fu exponent turns up using the same symbol. The only difference between the two is that one saves life, while the other takes it away.

Hwang finally manages to arrest Kang and his daughter, but one of the mysterious kung fu masters kills him and rescues the pair.

Kang then entrusts this man with the list of names of all the Ming patriots, a document that could spell disaster for the cause if it fell into the wrong hands.

At this stage of the game, the other kung fu master appears and both their identities are revealed.

All hell breaks loose as the two battles it out for the same goal – to win Chung Chung.
