SYNOPSIS

The greatest unknown heroes... they fight to defend, they fight to their death.

At the climax of the Ten Thousand Day War in Vietnam, many of the raiding operations of the U.S. Army failed. The U.S. Army find out that their missions are betrayed to the Vietcong Army by a secret radio station hidden in the depth of the Vietnam tropical jungle. Their attempts to locate the station are hampered by the rugged terrain and climate. They have sacrificed a lot of lives in attempt of reaching the station.

A group of Thai guerrilla experts are now called for the mission. They are chosen from the army, secret again department, and outlaws to prison. All of them know that their chance of success is one-in-a million, but they have no choice under command.

Meanwhile, two survivors from the Battle of Lao find in a heroic mission to destroy the radio station. Despite of the risks they head for their target with two guns.

The guerrilla team travel in the dark and rest at daytime to avoid being discovered by the enemy, but still they are being attached and two of them are killed. They believe there must be a traitor among themselves. They begin to lose faith among one another and their co-operation come to a breaking point.

The two crazy survivors are not so lucky. They are arrested by the enemy. One is tortured to death and the other is imprisoned waiting for execution.

The guerrilla experts are eliminated one by one by a mysterious assassin and only four of them are left. However, their greatest enemy is not the assassin but distrust among themselves.

The Vietcong start to play their search-and-destroy game. The experts are in greater danger. Fortunately, the Vietcong's attempt to attack them helps them to find out the traitor. They executed him.

Now the commando's destination is in sight. What can they do with their limited power in front of their well-prepared enemy!
